

Previously fortified with 17,500 pieces of prebuilt concrete walls, known as T-Walls, Camp Liberty was stripped of all protective structures by Iraqi forces shortly after the arrival of Camp Ashraf residents in early 2012. Iraqi authorities went every extra mile to make sure the residents of the camp would have no means to protect themselves and would suffer maximum casualties in the attacks that would later ensue.

Before

After

Camp Liberty Vulnerability

Before

After

Camp Liberty Vulnerability

Housing trailers damaged in rocket attack against Camp Liberty. The damage and loss of life could have been prevented if T-Walls had remained inside the camp.

Before

After

Camp Liberty Vulnerability

Removing the T-walls and leaving the residents defenseless
2012

Before

Removal of Protective T-Wall barriers by Iraqi government

After

T-walls piled up outside of the camp